

Is it safe to share?

John's scenarios Answers

1. It was ok for John's mum to share the picture of the beach they visited for the day as long it did not include close-ups of people outside of the family or the location.

It may be useful to discuss with children this post may not be safe to post if they are posting pictures when they are on holiday because it is letting people know their house is empty so it may be better to post these when they return

2. It was not safe to share John's location because now people know where he likes to go. Just posting a picture of the skate park would be the safe way to share information.

3. It was ok for John's dad to share the information about John completing his local library's reading challenge as long as he got permission from John to do so.

4. It was ok for John to write his username down on a piece of paper as long as John told his friend to not share it with other people without his consent.

5. It was not ok for John to post his details like his name, age and username on a site as these are private information that should not be shared with people you do not know.

6. It was ok for John's dad to record John learning to dive and post it on social media as long as John had given his dad permission to do so.

Is it safe to share?

The Three Little Pigs Answers

1. It was ok for the pigs' mum to post her sadness as long as it was to people she knows and trusts.
2. It was ok for Pig 2 to share this information as it was directly to family, whom he trusts and knows. This is just like writing a letter or sending a postcard.
3. It was not ok if Pig 1 shared the picture and tagged the location with people he did not know. It would be ok to share only with those that he knows and trusts.
4. It was ok for Pig 3 to share this information with his friends via a text if Pig 3 had permission from others in his house for it to be ok for others to come round to the house.
5. It was not ok for Pig 2 to share his new address online, this is private information, and even though his friends may see this, more than likely a lot of other people who he does not know and trust will also see it.
6. It was not ok for Pig 2 to have shared a video of his first house falling down with people he did not know and also because the subject matter would not be found funny by everyone.